1. In such voivodships as Szczecin (Stettin) and Olsztyn (Allenstein), where large military installations are located, the "landed estates" (standesgueter) are under military administration. In the voivodship of Szczecin, the Soviets have transferred or are in the process of transferring such estates to the Polish military authorities, so that in the future, no such estates in the voivodship will be under Soviet administration. The number of such estates in Soviet hands, however, has increased proportionately in the province of Olsztyn.
2. The Polish Army also controls a large share of such landed estates in the voivodship of Olsztyn. In this regard, the voivodship is divided into the following Polish-Soviet zones (approximately):
 - a. The Soviet troops control the northwestern part of the voivodship between the Pasleka (Passarge) River and the Lyna (Alle) River, starting from Dobrze Miasto (Guttstadt) in the south.
 - b. The Polish troops have their estates in the northern and south-eastern parts of this voivodship, especially the area along the Soviet border and around the large, numerous lakes.
3. The Polish state sovkhoses are also located in Olsztyn voivodship, but not along the border. There are no Polish troops in the Soviet section of this voivodship with the exception of one regiment in Braniewo (Braunsberg), which is probably an armored regiment. 25X1

there are 12 Polish regiments stationed in Olsztyn voivodship.
